HEY-EY-EY, LOCK! *Adventure on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal. By Morris Fradin. See-and-Know Press. 112 pp.
$3.95*

By WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS

THIS BOOK—with a foreword by George W. "Hooper" Wolfe, a "hoggie" or barefoot mule boy on the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal prior to 1908—is as Wolfe says—about a canal that is "a living nature center filled with beauty and serenity." The story, although fiction, is true to the facts.
It is centered on an old barge, Daisy Mae, whose Captain Tom Clark took an English boy, Michael, for a summer's tour of work on the barge. The captain manned the tiller. John Manson, a black, was the hog-gie who drove the mule Bozo, straining in his collar to get the barge moving down the towpath.

Tom Clark had bought the barge after being discharged from the Navy following the Spanish-American War of 1898.
His trip with Michael on the Daisy Mae started in Georgetown, near the bridge bearing the name of Francis Scott Key, the lawyer and author of the National Anthem who lived nearby.

This bit of fiction from the pen of Morris Fradin brings to life the history of an enchanted place—the C & O Canal National Historic Park. It is now transformed by hiker-biker camps every five miles from Cumberland to Seneca, where pure well water is found, toilet facilities, fireplaces and wood.

This is an ideal ribbon of a park for a metropolitan area, as it spreads hikers, cyclists and campers out over a stretch of 185 miles. It can become the greatest inland canoeway we have when water is restored to the canal. In its wilds, children can come to know that life is not just a dreary existence in concrete alleys but an exciting adventure along a river rich with history and teeming with life, from bass and wild turkey in the upper stretches to pileated woodpeckers and barred owls down below.

Excerpted from Washington Post Book Review Section, Sunday, July 14.

First marinate about three lbs. chicken with a sauce made from 1/2 cup lemon juice, 1/4 cup water, 3 tablespoons soy sauce, 1/4 teaspoon ground ginger and 1 teaspoon garlic salt. Barbecue about 30 minutes or until tender. (Time is very variable according to heat of coals. Start on greater height from coals if in doubt, baste often with marinade.)
