NEIGHBORLY NEWS

by Barbara Martin

We have new neighbors on 81st Street. Derick Moore is a TV producer, Robin Mee is an executive recruiter. Their two sons are Cole, 2, and Max, 6, who is in the first grade at Bannockburn.

Stan Shaper's hobby and artistry is wood-carving. Recently the Northern Virginia Carver's Association awarded him a blue ribbon for his carving of a Chinese dragon.

Robert Money (Bobby) has died. Bobby lived in this area for most of his life. He grew up in a house on MacArthur Boulevard, below Sycamore Island, and attended BCC High School. His sister is Alice Schaefer; his brothers, Raymond, Bub, and the late Carlton. He and his wife, Betty, lived in the Tomlinson Avenue apartments when they were first married. They had been living in Germantown for the past 4 years. Bobby was a lifetime member of the Cabin John Volunteer Fire Department.

This column appears every month. If you have news of your family, neighbors, or former Cabin John residents, please call Barbara Martin at 301-229-3482. Friends, I need your help in doing this column. Tell me about new babies, new residents, Cabin Johners who are relocating, marriages, deaths, honors, new jobs, retirements, and anything else of importance.

Citizens Association Meeting November 24, 1997 at 7:30 at the Clara Barton Community Center

- (1) Presentation by National Park Service Superintendent Audrey Calhoun on management plan for Glen Echo Park
- (2) Presentation by Ed Clark of request to County to turn empty lot at 9 Carver Road into children's playground
- (3) Dec. 14th Holiday Party

The most commonly asked question about the Village News is, "Why does it come out so late in the month?"

The answer is, it doesn't. It comes out at exactly the right time, just a few days before the Citizens Association meeting. That way we can alarm readers with misleading headlines like: County to install 18 traffic lights on MacArthur Blvd! This always insures a good turnout. The real question is, "Why is this called the November issue when it's the end of the month already?"

The Citizen Association meeting always occurs on the fourth Tuesday of the month and The Village News is designated to reflect the meeting it announces. Even though month is just about all played out.

Starting with the next issue The Village News will be identified by the month following its publication. This would be the December issue you are now holding, instead of November. Wouldn't that make better sense?

Looking Backward in Cabin John

Andrew E. Rice

Visiting the Gold Mine

*For one more time this column is quoting from the book by Morris Fradin, Hey-ey-ey, Lock, which tells the imaginary story of a trip up the C & O Canal by barge, from Washington to Cumberland, in 1908. The travellers have spent the night tied up along the canal near Cabin John as our tale resumes.*

Since Captain Clark did not have to deliver the Daisy Mae's cargo in Cumberland at any certain time, he suggested to Mike and Abby. "Let's inspect the goldmines near Falls Road and Conduit Road. That's not too far from Cabin John."

They already had both Bozo and Lazy Bones on a trail leading off the berm of the canal. . . . Throwing a blanket over each mule's back, Captain Clark lifted his nephew atop Bozo. Tomboy Abby already straddled Lazy Bones.

Holding a rope attached to the bridle of each animal, the captain strode off, while the youngsters held onto the reins and pressed their legs against the barrel-like sides of the mules. Sometimes they balked, or stopped to munch grass growing along the way. But their master tugged on the bridles and pulled, until the beasts decided to obey. Sometimes the party halted to pick and eat blackberries or elderberries or drink from a brook gurgling over smooth rocks.

The mules approached a creek running downhill to join the Potomac. Bozo's hooves kept slipping on the sides of the bank. Abby, following on Lazy Bones, suddenly yelled: "Hey! Whoa there!" and slid off her mule.

Startled, her father turned to see Abby squatting near the creek's edge. . . . "Father!" Abby was breathless with excitement. "Look at these flint arrowheads and spear points. I watched Bozo's hooves kick them loose from that bank."

Captain Clark hunched over, picked up the wet objects and examined them closely. "Must have been an Indian village hereabouts," he mused. "Probably the Susquehannas."

Soon the tall wooden shafts of the Maryland Mine Company came into view. The foreman, an acquaintance of Captain Clark, said they could visit the second level, 100 feet under the surface of the earth, where miners were chipping at gold ore in the sides of a great rock tunnel. The foreman handed out small kerosene oil lanterns and climbed down a ladder into a pit. The others followed, more slowly, for it grew darker and darker below them, with each step down the ladder. They lighted their lamps at the bottom and single-filed after the foreman, along a cool, black, dirt path that slanted downward into the ground.

Minutes of shuffling brought them to a number of brighter lights. Large acetylene gas lamps, covered by glass shields, were set up where miners drilled into the rock. They hammered on chisels, turned them, then hammered again and again, until several round holes were formed. Then they carefully inserted sticks of dynamite in each hole. The foreman ordered everyone to retreat behind a protective rock wall of the corridor.

"And cover your ears. Tight!" he warned, sharply.

He lighted the fuse and raced for cover. A bright spark shone; it crept, spluttering, along the ground and up the wall.

A burst of flame! A cloud of smoke! The earth shook underfoot. . . .

When the dust and smoke cleared, the miners advanced and attacked the rock wall and its fresh, jagged cavities. "Yippee!" one yelled. He fished both hands into a big hole and drew out a chunk of rock. A yellow vein glittered, ending in a blob about the size and shape of a lima bean,

"A nugget, sure enough," nodded the foreman. "You` kids have brought us luck," he added, "so here's a good sample of gold-bearing ore for each of you."
